in a much publicized and much maligned 2003 New York Times article "The Opt Out Revolution" the journalist Lisa Belkin made the controversial argument that highly educated women who enter the workplace tend to leave upon marrying and having children. Women who opt out is a collection of original essays by the leading scholars in the field of work and family research which takes a multi-disciplinary approach in questioning the basic thesis of the opt out revolution. The contributors illustrate that the desire to balance both work and family demands continues to be a point of unresolved concern for families and employers alike and women's equity within the workforce still falls behind. Ultimately they persuasively make the case that most women who leave the workplace are being pushed out by a work environment that is hostile to women, hostile to children and hostile to the demands of family caregiving and that small changes in outdated workplace policies regarding scheduling flexibility, telecommuting and mandatory overtime can lead to important benefits for workers and employers alike.

in the late 1990s when California's deregulation of the production and sale of electric power created massive energy shortages a group of environmental justice activists blocked construction of a power plant in their working class Mexican and Central American neighborhoods. Why did they choose this battle and how did the largely high school student activists come to prevail in the face of statewide political opinion? Power Politics is a rich and readable study of a grassroots campaign where longtime labor and environmental allies found themselves on opposite sides of a conflict that pitted good jobs against good air. Karen Brodtkin analyzes how those issues came to be opposed and in doing so unpacks the racial and class dynamics that shape Americans' grasp of labor and environmental issues. Power Politics activists stood at the forefront of a movement that is building broad-based environmental coalitions and placing social justice at the heart of a new and robust vision.
